

Joyce L. Broussard received her Ph.D. in History at the University of Southern California in 1998, her MA in History from California State University, Northridge in 1993.

Joining the CSUN faculty in 1999, Professor Broussard teaches undergraduate classes on the American South, the Civil War and Reconstruction, U.S. history, gender and legal history, U.S. women's history, and introductory and advanced research and methods classes. She also teaches extensively at the graduate level with a focus on historical research and methods in the history of the American South, Civil War and Reconstruction, and gender and legal history. A major component of her academic career at CSUN has been her involvement as co-director and director of the Natchez (Mississippi) Project in Southern History, which includes coordinating and facilitating the Biennial Historic Natchez Conferences (1994-2013). This endeavor supports student research trips to the lower South and internship experiences in archival and historic records management. She has published widely on both U.S. southern and gender history, and has a book forthcoming on the history of widowed, divorced, and single women in the nineteenth-century South. Broussard also has worked as a consultant to various academic websites including numerous PBS productions in support of historical documentaries dealing with slavery, the Supreme Court, and the history of "Jim Crow" and racism in America. Prior to joining the CSUN faculty, Professor Broussard served as the head archivist at Dickinson College in Carlisle, PA. (1996-98) and at the Hollywood Foreign Press Association in Beverly Hills, CA. (1995-96), as well as a professional film editor for television and cinema.
