CSU Trustees Unanimously Approve Northridge Master Plan

Transparency, Openness and Inclusiveness are Hallmarks of Two-Year Process to Shape Campus of Future

California State University trustees on March 15 voted their unanimous approval of Envision 2035, the Cal State Northridge planning initiative that will help frame the university's physical development for the next several decades.

The vote approved the revised master plan as well as an increase in the campus' master plan enrollment capacity from 25,000 to 35,000 full-time equivalent students (FTES). That growth is equivalent to about 1.6 percent annual growth over 30 years. The trustees also certified the final environmental impact report on the plan.

In remarks to the trustees, President Jolene Koester called the adoption of the new campus master plan "a critical step in our ability to plan for CSUN's future."

President Koester in spring 2004 appointed a 25-member campus committee to lead a comprehensive review of CSUN's existing master plan, and to work collaboratively on an updated master plan envisioning the campus' future layout and design.

Praising President Koester and university officials for their leadership, CSU Chancellor Charles B. Reed also saluted all the Northridge participants for their patience in creating a plan that anticipates the evolving educational needs of the region.

The Cal State Northridge of the future will feature new academic facilities, homes for new faculty and staff, more student housing and an abundance of open space.

Headed by CSUN finance department chair William Jennings, committee members devoted nearly two years to consultation and study, to a comprehensive environmental review process, to student photo surveys and a series of open forums that sounded out both campus stakeholders and Valley communities.

"The campus did everything it could to involve and include the community and the broader San Fernando Valley region," said President Koester, describing the process as "very transparent and open."

Specifically, the plan defines sites for about 1.9 million square feet of future campus academic and support facilities to accommodate the increased FTES enrollment. Near-term projects will include a 1,700-seat, 163,000 square foot performing arts center, a parking structure for about 1,500 spaces and a centrally located mass transit hub for students, faculty, staff and community members.

It also proposes the development of about 600 on-campus faculty/staff housing units, mostly on the North Campus, and allows for student housing, parking and transportation sufficient to handle enrollment growth while maintaining desirable open space.

EMS Program to Help Campus Protect the Environment

Environmental Management System's Policies and Practices to Keep Campus 'Green'

Cal State Northridge is launching an awareness campaign to involve the entire campus community in protecting the university environment, under the leadership of CSUN's new Environmental Management System (EMS).

An organized effort to limit the impact on the campus environment, the program aims to ensure that CSUN will remain a "green" and healthy place to work and study.

Northridge has been in the forefront of developing an EMS, which sets environmental policy and provides guidance on ways students, faculty and staff can be effective stewards of the campus environment.

Faculty and staff are invited to initiate their involvement in the program by completing a brief training on practices that effectively safeguard the environment. The ten-minute session can be completed online at www-admn.csun.edu/ebos/ems/, under "General Awareness Training."

Mo Qayoumi, vice president for administration and finance, and CFO, said Northridge's program helps carry out the CSU's systemwide commitment to sustainability—practices that prevent the depletion of important resources on its campuses. The vice president's division includes Environmental Health, Safety & Risk Management.

CSUN's leadership will provide a model for other institutions, Vice President Qayoumi added. As a learning-centered university, CSUN also will provide opportunities for students, faculty and staff to evolve into more effective environmental stewards as they participate in EMS-related projects.

Ron Norton, director of environmental health and occupational safety, said most people on campus consider themselves friends of the environment, but may be surprised to discover they are not aware of the procedures to follow to protect that "friend."

"People may not know, for example, that state law has long prohibited disposal of all kinds of batteries—flashlight, watch, cell phone, calculator—by simply tossing them into waste bins," said Norton.

The EMS training provides answers and guidance for proper practices in such cases. Battery disposal guidelines, for example, can be obtained from Environmental Health and Safety at (818) 677-2401.

Electronic products provide another example. Copiers, computers and fax machines become what is called E-waste at the end of their useful lives, said Environmental Health and Safety compliance manager Tony Pepe. "People who 'think EMS' will prevent those products from doing harm by calling Asset Management for recycling guidelines," he said. Asset Management's number is (818) 677-5537.

To raise awareness about EMS, Environmental Health and Safety will distribute informational brochures and an e-mail newsletter, and provide EMS information to new employees.

The campus project is managed by the EMS Advisory Board, chaired by College of Science and Mathematics Dean Jerry Stinner. For information, contact EHS at (818) 677-2401. ■

University Police, DMV Crack Down on Disabled Parking Fraud

Campus Operation Cites 15 Drivers for Parking in Spaces Reserved for People with Disabilities

Four Cal State Northridge police officers joined 20 investigators from California's Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) in a March crackdown on able-bodied drivers who fraudulently use disabled placards to obtain prime parking spaces.

Fifteen drivers were cited in the March 21 operation for misusing the placards.

"Unfortunately, disabled placard fraud may be one of the most abused laws on the books," said university police Capt. Alfredo Fernandez, commanding officer responsible for traffic and parking enforcement at CSUN. "Joint task forces such as these allow us to place a more sustained and directed effort in our enforcement of the law that would not usually be available with our resources alone."

Corporal Nathan Jones of CSUN's Police Department verifies a vehicle placard.

DMV spokesman Mike Miller said investigations such as the one that took place in March are made in response to complaints from people with disabilities, local law enforcement authorities, campus officials or even fellow students.

"Able-bodied people who park in disabled spots to save themselves time may think they're committing a harmless, victimless crime," he said. "But they're actually inconveniencing and potentially endangering someone who can't park anywhere else. We're happy to work with campus officials to expose people who try to cheat the system."

During the recent investigation, authorities made contact with drivers who parked in spaces for the disabled and showed no obvious signs of disability. Officers verified the placard displayed and determined whether its required registration was in fact issued to the driver in question.

Sentences handed down to past violators cited on campus with no prior convictions included seizure of the placard, fines from $250 to $980, eight hours of community service at Cal State Northridge's Center on Disabilities and a one-year probation. Convictions can result in fines as high as $3,500 and imprisonment for up to six months.

The operation should serve as a warning to anyone who even considers breaking the law, said Anne Glavin, chief of CSUN's Police Department. "Take the extra time and make the extra steps. It's not worth getting caught." ■

Northridge and PIQE Form Parent Education Partnership

Program Involves Parents in Push to Boost College Admissions for Under-Served

Aiming to improve the college admission rates of under-served students, Cal State Northridge and the Parent Institute for Quality Education (PIQE) have formed a partnership to provide an innovative parent-involvement program to 15 area public schools during the next three years.

PIQE provides nine-week programs that teach parents of K-12 students how to navigate the school system and assess their children's grade-level academic progress. The program also explains about "A thru G" high school classes and tests that are required for admission to universities. Since 1987, PIQE has graduated more than 350,000 California parents from among 15 language groups.

"Cal State Northridge is proud to be working with the Parent Institute for Quality Education," said President Jolene Koester. "Given the increased diversity of California and our multicultural society, we must work to ensure that everyone in the community has the opportunity to benefit from a college education."

PIQE, a statewide research-based and comprehensive parent involvement program in California, plans to offer its program to parents at five San Fernando Valley-area public schools for each year of the three-year program. Among the schools participating in the first year will be Sylmar High School, Van Nuys Middle School and Sun Valley Middle School. PIQE classes are taught in English, Spanish and 13 other languages, and are offered in morning and evening sessions.

Vahac Mardirosian, PIQE's founder, said the organization had its genesis in the Los Angeles student walkouts of 1968 and in the more than 30 years of dedicated work by many individuals in the community committed to a quality education for all students.

"PIQE has developed and widely implemented a model for increasing parent involvement in K-12 schools where parent participation has been difficult to achieve. The barriers that discourage immigrant parents from participating in schools are not insurmountable," Mardirosian said.

The California State University system, through CSU Chancellor Charles B. Reed, has pledged $75,000 to PIQE during a three year-period to serve the 15 schools within Cal State Northridge's service area. PIQE will match the Cal State system's pledge and leverage private contributions to cover the program's cost. The host schools also will cover a portion of the program costs.

"The CSU partnership with PIQE is significant since it adds to many other efforts to help improve the public school system," Reed said.

Added PIQE President and CEO David Valladolid: "This special partnership with the CSU, and with CSUN, will greatly benefit the children of PIQE graduates and enhance the success of our recruitment of parents. It will send families the profound message that their children can attend college if they study hard and meet the admission requirements."

PIQE also offers a four-month "Coaches" follow-up program and a six-hour teacher workshop on parent involvement. For more information, visit www.piqe.org. ■

Envision 2035...

a CSUN alumna. Speaking for Mission and Pierce Colleges as well as Valley College, President Wieder said CSUN is the "campus of choice" for students at those institutions.

"We want to make sure we are going to have a place for our students to transfer," she said, adding that CSUN is "an important part of the economy of the San Fernando Valley."

William Watkins, CSUN's associate vice president for student affairs, underscored the need to expand on-campus housing for students, as proposed by Envision 2035. With students crowding the waiting list for the campus' current 2,100 beds, the 2,500 extra beds to be added for students during the life of the plan are a high priority, he noted.

"I believe the master plan reflects the mission, goals and values of the university and the CSU," Watkins said.

Northridge's Art Department chair David Moon told trustees the vision for faculty housing on CSUN's North Campus is an idea whose time has come. Escalating local housing prices in the past five or six years, Moon said, have created "great difficulties" for the university in the hiring and retaining of faculty and staff.

"This is a very typical story that I hear throughout our campuses," he added.

A representative of Los Angeles City Councilman Greig Smith raised concerns about responsibility for traffic project costs connected with campus plan changes. State law and court rulings, however, indicate the CSU is exempt from payment for campus plan-related improvements outside of the CSUN campus.

In Brief

West, Davila Take on New Soccer Posts

Keith West

Keith West has been appointed as the new Cal State Northridge women's soccer coach. He has been the assistant coach for the program since 2004.

In a related development, Terry Davila has been named director of both the men's and women's soccer programs, and will remain as head men's coach.

Interim Athletic Director Janet Lucas, who announced the appointments in March, said West "has proven himself to be committed to the growth and development of this soccer team."

"I have been preparing to become a head coach since I started coaching soccer here and I have always known that this was the place I wanted to be," West said.

Previously, West served as a graduate assistant in the CSUN soccer program, moving on to an assignment as assistant coach for the men's team in 1999.

During West's service as Davila's assistant, the women's soccer team went 23-14-1 overall, and qualified for the Big West tournament for the first time in 2004.

"Keith is a winner and he has a lot of integrity and it will serve him well as head coach," said Coach Davila. "You have to take the proper steps and improve each year in order to grow as a program, and I think we are doing that here at Cal State Northridge."

Heavy Rainfall Forces USU Renovation Delay

Heavy rainfall and a ruptured water main, together with production and delivery difficulties, have forced delays in completion of the $17.2 million University Student Union renovation project.

A grand opening to celebrate the debut of the complex's modern and "user-friendly" second phase had been planned for April 19, but the official festivities now will wait until fall 2006.

Jason Wang, USU associate director for operations and services, said the USU's new Hub building will open in May, and its coffee house and convenience store will open early in June.

A festive grand opening will be held in September 2006, with a day-long festival offering live music, vendors, a DJ kick-off party, free refreshments and the official ribbon-cutting ceremony.

"The rain these past few weeks has delayed pouring the concrete," Wang said, citing late winter downpours that soaked construction surfaces. To compound difficulties, a water main break that occurred during grading of the outdoor performance site requires permanent repair before the site can be surfaced.

In addition to the new Hub building and the campus' third Freudian Sip coffeehouse, the second phase of the renovation includes an outdoor performance area, a convenience store, a computer lab with 70 work stations and free printing for students, a new Matador Involvement Center, state-of-the-art meeting rooms, television and study lounges, and an alumni reading room.

Former Ambassador Wilson to Speak

Former ambassador to Iraq Joseph Wilson will speak at Cal State Northridge at 4 p.m. Thursday, April 6, in the university's Performing Arts Center. The event is sponsored by Associated Students.

Wilson's lecture, "Speaking Truth to Power and the Consequences," also will be broadcast simultaneously in the University Student Union (USU) Northridge Center.

A 3:30 p.m. news conference in the Northridge Center will precede the speech, followed by a 5:15 p.m. book signing in the Northridge Center lobby. Wilson is the author of "The Politics of Truth: Inside the Lies that Put the White House on Trial and Betrayed My Wife's CIA Identity."

The former U.S. career diplomat, who served as acting ambassador to Iraq and as ambassador to Gabon, has spoken publicly about his conflict with the White House over the "outing" of his wife, former CIA operative Valerie Plame.

In a New York Times article, Wilson contradicted the assertion in President George Bush's 2003 State of the Union address that ousted Iraqi president Saddam Hussein had sought significant quantities of enriched uranium from Africa. A subsequent leak to the news media revealing Plame's undercover CIA status became the subject of an investigation led by Special Counsel Patrick Fitzgerald.

Tickets for the Wilson lecture are available to the Cal State Northridge campus community, with current CSUN identification, at the USU ticket office. The event is free. For more information, contact Leanne Vincent, Associated Students, at (818) 677-7899.

CSUN Among Top 10 in Latina Enrollment

Cal State Northridge ranks among the top ten institutions nationwide in bachelor's degrees given to Latinas, based on National Center for Education Studies statistics compiled by the Hispanic Outlook for Higher Education Magazine in a recent issue.

CSUN ranked seventh overall for bachelor's degrees given to Latinas.

Eight of the top 20 schools ranked came from California, including Cal State Los Angeles and Cal State Fullerton. CSUN ranked above San Diego State University and UCLA.

"Cal State Northridge always has had a strong, historic commitment to serving students from traditionally underrepresented communities," said CSUN President Jolene Koester. "The faculty and staff at Cal State Northridge take great pride in providing a quality academic experience for all students, and we are honored to be recognized for the success of this work."

The magazine said out of the top 20 schools in the grouping, more Latinas attained bachelor's degrees than Latinos. California's universities also led the nation in master's degrees earned by Latinas and in the number of Latinas listed as full-time faculty in universities, according to the survey. ■
