Devonshire Downs Groundbreaking Set for Fall 2008

Faculty, Staff Residential Community to Welcome First Residents in 2009

Sixty years after it opened as a popular harness racing track and fairgrounds, Devonshire Downs is poised to reclaim its glory days—this time as a planned village-style residential community for Cal State Northridge faculty and staff.

Nearly 160 two-story, for-sale town homes on about 15 acres between Lindley and Zelzah Avenues north of Lassen Street are planned for the new Devonshire Downs' $60 million initial phase, which will break ground on CSUN's North Campus in fall 2008. It will welcome its first occupants in fall 2009.

The remaining 15 acres at the site will be developed during the next ten to 15 years, in two or three phases smaller both in size and scope than Phase I, ultimately yielding more than 400 units, some of which may be rental dwellings.

"The presence of Devonshire Downs on CSUN's north campus will greatly enhance our ability to attract and retain the high-caliber faculty and staff associated with our university," said President Jolene Koester. "Not only will we provide them with attainably priced homes, but homes that will be within easy walking distance to classrooms, labs and campus offices."

A preliminary sketch of the Devonshire Downs faculty/staff residential community reflects the values CSUN's design team hopes to achieve in the townhomes: curbside and streetscape appeal as well as an individual look for each unit.

—President Jolene Koester

Currently, CSUN's only faculty/staff dwellings are 31 rental units located in the College Court Townhomes complex on Plummer Street, west of campus.

An on-campus village environment in which colleagues at work become neighbors at home, President Koester said, will strengthen both the sense of community within the university and its connections with the surrounding neighborhoods.

To create that village environment, campus leaders worked with Steinberg Architects and TGP Landscaping on a plan containing intimate internal pedestrian promenades that provide "a neighborhood experience of open, low-walled porches or front yards along the promenades and parkways." Constructed in blocks of three to five attached units ranging from 1300–1950 square feet, each town home will have a private two-car garage with alley access.

Generous, energy-efficient window space, lofty ceilings, high-grade insulation and sound attenuation in common walls will be features available in all the town homes. Some of the available floor plans can be modified to accommodate persons with disabilities.

Three acres of recreational space within Devonshire Downs will be given over to a central village green, pocket parks, groves of trees, a swimming pool, playing courts and a community building.

Pedestrian and bike paths will lead directly from Devonshire Downs to the South Campus via a shady, tree-lined parkway that will terminate at the corner of Lindley Avenue and Lassen Street. From that terminus, village residents will cross the street to catch the CSUN tram, continue walking or resume their bike ride to campus.

Common Reading Program Puts Freshmen on Same Page

'One Campus, One Book' Pilot Program Spurs Dialogue About Vietnam War Chronicle

When Cal State Northridge freshmen walked into their classrooms on August 23, they were entering more than a bricks and mortar structure. They were entering a conversation.

The conversation revolves around "The Things They Carried," author Tim O'Brien's powerful, award-winning collection of 22 stories chronicling the narrator's Vietnam war experiences. Many freshmen will be reading and talking about the book this year as part of CSUN's pilot Freshman Common Reading Program: "One Campus, One Book."

According to Cheryl Spector, director of the campus' Academic First Year

Freshman Darrell Tripp of Pasadena, a biotechnology major, reads "The Things They Carried" on campus. Tim O'Brien's collection of stories is the book selection of the Freshman Common Reading Program pilot.

Supervisor Antonovich Allocates $500,000 for Arts Center

Performing Arts Center at CSUN 'Will Draw Residents from Adjoining Valleys and Across the County'

County Supervisor Michael Antonovich has announced a $500,000 contribution toward the development of the new performing arts center planned for Cal State Northridge.

A collaborative effort between the county and the university to improve access to the performing arts for the residents of the San Fernando Valley, the new 1,700-seat venue will join the county's Music Center, Center Theatre Group and the Los Angeles Opera to showcase quality music, dance, theater, film and theater productions.

"This new performing arts center is the culmination of a 49-year-old dream by CSUN's founders, who intended for the campus to be the cultural and economic heart of the San Fernando Valley," said Antonovich. "It will be the largest arts venue in the Valley and will draw residents from adjoining valleys and across the county."

Cal State Northridge's planned performing arts center is shown here in a conceptual drawing. County Supervisor Michael Antonovich recently announced a $500,000 contribution toward the development of the arts center.

President Jolene Koester said the university is "very grateful for the contribution that Supervisor Antonovich has provided for the university's planned performing arts center.

"It reflects his strong commitment to ensuring that the people of Los Angeles, and particularly the San Fernando Valley and its neighboring areas, have the opportunity to be enriched by high quality cultural arts programs and events."

Large enough to accommodate full-scale Broadway productions and operas, the arts center's main performance hall will feature advanced acoustical tuning to adapt for a variety of presentations in music, dance, theater, films or speakers.

CSUN, California's leading public university in preparing future teachers, has committed to major arts education and K-12 outreach efforts in the new center.

One of the three largest performing arts centers in the nation, the Music Center of Los Angeles County accommodates nearly 1.3 million people annually to performances at its four major downtown venues. Its Education Division offers a professional development program for teachers. ■

"One guiding principle was that a resident should be able to walk in the middle of a summer day, shaded and comfortable," said Tom McCarron, executive director and president of The University Corporation and the North Campus-University Park Development Corporation.

Orange groves at the community's two entrances—at Zelzah and Lindley Avenues—will greet residents and visitors, providing them with a California-style welcome. A leafy atmosphere will prevail throughout the community, a thoughtful enhancement generated by the "green" planting ethic of the project's Valley-based landscaping firm.

"The community's landscape design incorporates some of the major themes of the campus master plan, ensuring that the community will be well integrated with the campus, while retaining its distinct residential identity," said Colin Donahue, associate vice president of Facilities Development and Operations.

The entire Devonshire Downs site will be elevated, separating residences from traffic and noise without the sense of "cutting the community off from the world" caused by thick, obtrusive walls, said Rick Evans, associate executive director of The University Corporation.

Faculty and staff interested in purchasing a home in Devonshire Downs should check the North Campus Web site www.csun.edu/northcampus for the latest information. Highest priority will be given to recently hired faculty.

The goal, said McCarron, is to price the homes at 20-25 percent below prices in the surrounding area, serving buyers whose annual household income falls between $70,000-$110,000.

A minimal charge for the ground lease—buyers will own their homes, not the ground underneath—will be paid in monthly installments. A monthly fee for ongoing maintenance of common areas and infrastructure also will be assessed, similar to the process at other townhome complexes.

Homeowners will be able to sell to other qualified employees of CSUN or its affiliated auxiliaries, under resale price control terms designed to keep Devonshire Downs homes affordable for future generations of CSUN employees.

The housing project was part of the Cal State Northridge campus master plan, developed with full community participation and approved in March 2006 by the CSU Board of Trustees. For more information, visit www.csun.edu/northcampus or call Rick Evans at (818) 677-6285. ■ we are asking students to join."

Under the program, participating faculty can order the "The Things They Carried" for individual sections of freshman courses such as University 100, 097 Developmental Reading, 098 Developmental Writing and the 155 freshman composition courses.

The 32 sections of University 100 alone include 600-plus students, said Spector, reaching across a wide swath of disciplines involved with those courses—from business and pre-dental to psychology, science and math—as well as freshmen who are officially undecided.

That number does not even include freshmen who are or will be reading the book for other areas of study, said Spector. Political science professor Virginia Lussier, for example, has incorporated an entire unit on the book into her Political Science 155 sections.

Spector hopes the idea of the program will prove infectious. "You can't really mandate the book, because faculty members have to be free to teach what they believe is appropriate," she said. "But it's intellectual fun for the faculty."

"The Things They Carried" already is engaging students like freshman Matt DeMarco, a pre-cinema and television arts major. "It's a great way to meet and talk with other freshmen, and to broaden your perspectives," said DeMarco, who is reading the book in lecturer Linda Overman's developmental writing class.

DeMarco appreciates being able to share ideas with a peer outside of his immediate area of interest; he has discussed ideas from "Carried" with a friend who is reading it in a theatre class. "It's neat how they're using the book as a universal thing," he said.

Freshman Brian Hosseiniyar agreed. "Having a common book for freshmen does make discussion more available between students who are from different classes," he said. For Hosseiniyar, the idea of being drafted hit home. "We are in a time of war, and a draft is not unforeseeable."

DeMarco saw in a chapter entitled "Spin" a message relevant for freshmen.

One of its characters, he said, uses his immaturity as an excuse for his bad behavior. "I know a lot of freshmen who use that 'I'm just an immature freshman' excuse."

The spark of ideas is just what Spector and her committee had in mind when they gathered in October 2006 to create a common reading program at CSUN like those at other universities where such initiatives already are in place. Reading programs are underway on at least five other CSU campuses.

Spector already is looking toward 2008-09; campus-wide suggestions for next year's freshman book selection are being submitted at www.csun.edu/afye/CommonRead.html or at cberyl.spector@csun.edu.

Interested faculty and staff may contact Spector for free copies of "The Things They Carried;" limited quantities are still available. Eight copies also have been placed on reserve at the Oviatt Library. ■

In Brief

Former William Morris Exec to Launch Speaker Series

Samuel Haskell, former executive vice president and worldwide head of television for the William Morris Agency, Inc., will launch the fall 2007 Executive Speaker Series with a September 20 talk to students in the Curb College of Arts, Media, and Communication.

Haskell will share his career insights and counsel with cinema and television arts students in professor Nate Thomas' "Intermediate Film Production" class, associate professor Robert Gustafson's "History of Broadcasting and Television Program Development" class, and assistant professor Thelma Vickroy's "Magazine Format Video Production" class.

Currently chairman of the board for the Miss America Organization, Haskell is a committed philanthropist whose many charitable activities include working with Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour and University of Mississippi officials to organize a 2005 MSNBC telethon that raised more than $15 million for victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Haskell began his career in the mailroom of the William Morris Agency, in 1978. In 1990, he became the agency's youngest senior vice president and in 1994, he was named West coast head of television.

Before his promotion to the worldwide head of television position, Haskell became executive vice president and a member of the William Morris Agency board of directors. His clients included entertainers Bill Cosby, Kathie Lee Gifford, Ray Romano, Whoopi Goldberg, Debbie Allen, Delta Burke, Marilu Henner, Martin Short, Kirstie Alley, Tony Danza and many more.

The Executive Speaker Series was initiated in 2004 to provide CSUN students with opportunities to learn directly from the distinguished executives who participate.

Public Safety Dept. Creates Threat Management Unit

The tragic events at Virginia Tech last April and the national dialogue that followed have underscored the importance of campus safety at educational institutions nationwide.

Cal State Northridge's Department of Public Safety has formed a Threat Management Unit in an effort to help university officials evaluate the dangers posed by persons whose actions may raise alarm, or at least concern, in members of the campus community.

"The ability of the university police to be able to provide assessments of just how dangerous persons of concern within the campus community may be is vital to an overall campus safety and security plan," said CSUN Police Chief Anne Glavin, who created a similar unit while she was chief of police at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1998.

"Identifying individuals who require the intervention of support services such as counseling is critical in managing individuals with behavioral concerns or those who are spiraling downward due to problems in their lives," Chief Glavin said.

The newly formed Threat Management Unit is charged with evaluating all reported incidents of workplace violence, domestic violence or fear of violence. Officers will conduct extensive investigations into reported incidents and take appropriate steps to reduce or eliminate possible hazards to personal safety and/or property.

The specialized unit is modeled after an approach to threat assessment utilized by the U.S. Secret Service. Three university police officers are assigned full time to the unit on an "as needed" basis.

China Institute Grants Awarded

Cal State Northridge's China Institute has awarded its annual Faculty Development Grants totaling $3,000 to health sciences associate professor Louis Rubino; finance, real estate and insurance associate professor Patty Born and music professor Katherine Baker—all of whom aspire to advance the field of China studies.

Rubino, co-coordinator of the China Institute's Medical Management training program for seven years, will use his grant to help advance nutritional health education in China.

Born's grant will enable her to study the market for Chinese life insurance and retirement products, and to further her understanding of international markets for insurance. While on sabbatical in Shanghai during fall 2007, she will obtain data and resources for an insurance research project.

Baker used her grant to visit Shanghai with the CSUN Women's Chorale in June 2007. She led the 28-person delegation, which gave two performances: one in combination with a Shanghai women's chorus as part of the Performing Arts Series of Shanghai Normal University, and one sponsored by private individuals at a major Shanghai performance venue. ■
