CSUN Enters One of Its Busiest Construction Phases Ever

Crews Get to Work on Student Housing, Science and Parking Structures—Other Projects Are Not Far Off

The workhorses of major construction—cranes, bulldozers and trucks—are beginning to appear on campus as Cal State Northridge enters one of its busiest building phases since the massive reconstruction projects of the 1990s.

Student Housing Complex

Work began December 17 on the $30 million student housing complex slated for the northeast side of campus, south of Lassen Street between Lindley and Zelzah Avenues.

Ken Rosenthal, manager of construction services for Facilities Planning, said workers have completed pad preparation for the new complex: a 58,000-square foot, four-story dormitory; a four-story, 29,000-square foot dorm; and a single-story, 6,000-square foot “common program” building with a recreation room, a classroom and other features.

Heavy January rains set in as work was poised to begin on the digging of footings and placement of rebar at the 2.8-acre site, Rosenthal said, but the delay is not expected to affect the projected spring 2009 completion of the complex.

The student rent-funded complex will provide living space for 396 students, two to a bedroom with shared living/meeting quarters. Tim Trevan, director of Student Housing and Conference Services, said the small-scale design by AC Martin Partners, Inc., will give students a greater sense of community.

Science 5 Building

The much-anticipated four-story Science 5 building (temporarily named Chaparral Hall) is “right on schedule,” said Colin Donahue, associate vice president for facilities development and operations. Construction on the nearly 90,000-square foot structure, expected to “come on board” in spring 2009, began in July 2007 with the relocation of some seven miles of utilities. The erection of its steel infrastructure—delayed by the recent rainstorms—should commence within days.

Last week, 16 trucks stored on North Campus began hauling in the 700 tons of steel needed for the Cannon Design architects project, whose $51 million total cost was funded by a 2004 state capital construction measure. “We have a 250-ton crane on Lindley Avenue, ready for action,” said construction services manager Rosenthal. The crane will offload the heavy steel and—weather permitting—campus onlookers should see a frame rise within six weeks on the site south of the Botanic Garden.

G3 Parking Structure

The site has been prepared for the planned 406,000-square foot, Harley Ellis Devereaux-designed G3 Parking Structure off Zelzah Avenue between Prairie and Dearborn Streets, which began construction in December. “Within a month, the footings will be completed and you’ll start to see Campus Construction continued on page 2

Public Safety on the Case with ‘Active Shooter’ Drills

CSUN Partners with CHP, LAPD, LAUSD in Back-to-Back ‘Real Time’ Exercises

In January, two back-to-back “real time” emergency drills simulating active shooter scenarios left campus law enforcement officials more than satisfied that CSUN has effective procedures in place to deal with crises of that nature.

Partnering with the California Highway Patrol, the Los Angeles Police Department and the Los Angeles Unified School District police, CSUN’s Public Safety Department launched separate operations on January 3 and 10 to test Northridge operations in the event of a Virginia Tech-style emergency.

Law enforcement and outside expert evaluators gave high marks to both

'Nickel and Dimed' Next Up for Common Reading Program

After a 10-month search for a book that will engage Cal State Northridge freshmen as successfully as did "The Things They Carried," the Freshman Common Reading Program's inaugural selection, program director Cheryl Spector has announced a winner for the 2008-09 academic year.

Barbara Ehrenreich's bestselling "Nickel and Dimed: On (Not) Getting By in America" emerged as the winning choice after the program's campuswide Selection Committee considered some 30 titles submitted by students, faculty and staff.

The book had stiff competition. Runners-up included "The Absolutely True Diary of a Part-Time Indian," by Sherman Alexie; "Chinese Lessons: Five Classmates and the Story of the New China," by John Pomfret; "The Kite Runner," by Khaled Hosseini; and "Waiting for the Barbarians," by J. M. Coetzee.

When the "One Campus, One

Book" common reading program debuted on campus in fall 2007, freshman were joined by many across campus and across the disciplines in reading and discussing Tim O'Brien's "The Things They Carried," a collection of compelling stories about the narrator's Vietnam war experiences.

"O'Brien's book was great intellectual fun for everybody," said Spector, also a professor of English and director of CSUN's Office of Academic First Year Experiences. "We put up an exhibit of freshman art inspired by the book last fall, and faculty developed many other amazingly creative assignments to engage their students. I'm hoping we'll be even more successful with our second book."

Described as "unforgettable" and "full of riveting grit" by Newsweek, Ehrenreich's narrative follows her from state to state and job to job as waitress, hotel maid, Wal-Mart salesperson, and nursing home aide. Along the way, she discovers "a thousand desperate stratagems for survival" in a world where one job often is not enough.

Selection criteria took the form of four basic questions: Does the book 1) engage freshman and draw them into reading and reflection, 2) encourage freshmen to grow intellectually, 3) encourage thought in a variety of courses and contexts, and 4) value diverse cultural perspectives and address contemporary social issues?

"Now that we've decided on the 2008-09 selection, it's time to start thinking about 2009-10," said Spector. "Consider the criteria and send us your ideas!" Next year's selection committee will convene in summer 2008, she added. Members of the CSUN community, including freshmen, are welcome to join.

A complete list of the 2008-09 suggested titles is available on the program Web site: www.csun.edu/afye/CommonRead.html. ■ columns being poured," said Facilities Planning's Rosenthal.

"G3 will provide lots more parking on the campus' west side," said Captain Fred Fernandez, head of Public Safety's parking and transportation services unit. "It will spread out our ability to provide overall campus parking."

Captain Fernandez said G3's 1,776 stalls—including those on its accompanying surface lot—will represent an emphatically welcome net gain of about 1,000 parking spaces for the campus. Campus users should start parking in the $22 million structure in spring 2009.

Devonshire Downs

The initial phase of the Devonshire Downs residential community for faculty and staff is due to break ground on the North Campus in fall 2008, with the welcome mat rolling out in fall 2009 for the first homeowners. Phase I will close out in 2010.

Nearly 160 two-story town homes on about 15 acres between Lindley and Zelzah Avenues north of Lassen Street will comprise the first phase. Upon completion, Devonshire Downs will have approximately 400 units.

Campus leaders worked with Steinberg Architects and TGP Landscaping on Devonshire Downs' village-style atmosphere of pedestrian promenades and low-walled porches. Corcoran & Botich architects currently are working on the housing unit design documents.

Performing Arts Center

An update on the planned new regional performing arts center will be provided in a future edition of @CSUN.

Student Recreation Center

Schematic designs are now under preparation for the more than 100,000-square foot Student Recreation Center, a dramatic three-story structure to be built east of the University Student Union.

Working and preliminary drawings are next, said project coordinator

Work crews will break ground on the Devonshire Downs faculty/staff residential community, shown in the preliminary sketch above, in fall 2008. The first occupants will be welcomed in fall 2009.

The campus' new residence halls will open their doors to CSUN students in 2009, providing living space for 396 students who will enjoy the sense of community fostered by the halls' small-scale design.

Work has begun on Chaparral Hall, CSUN's new state-of-the-art science building planned for the campus' southeast sector. It is expected to "come on board" in 2009.

Bryanne Knight, followed by the start of construction in summer 2009, barring weather delays. With a total project cost of $70 million authorized by a spring 2007 student referendum, the facility is slated to open in 2011.

An abundance of ideas are pouring into the schematic design phase, said Jason Wang, associate director of USU operations and services. "We have decided on a 'green ethic' as one of our major design criteria," said Wang.

Working with the "green"-oriented LPA architects group, Wang said, has produced ideas for the "thoughtful, energy-efficient use of natural light" using east-facing windows and innovations such as the sloping of the high basketball court ceilings, to allow heat to circulate naturally and rainwater to roll off effectively.

Knight believes a planned entry level rock wall will prove irresistible to student users, and the liberal use of glass will permit passersby to look in on all kinds of activities, "promoting the idea of health and wellness for our students, both mentally and physically."

About 50 percent of the third-floor indoor jogging track—at an elevation of 15 feet above the three-court basketball gym—will be windowed, providing joggers with a splendid view of the outdoors and adjacent mountains.

Other student-requested features include an outdoor lap and leisure pool, a racquetball court, a multi-activity gym, rooms for group fitness classes, a sport club meeting space, a drop-in child care facility, a boxing studio, cardio exercise and weight spaces and more. ■

Chief Susan Riseling, associate vice chancellor and chief of police at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and Cal Poly Pomona emergency services coordinator Debbie McFall.

Overall, Riseling said, the CSUN police department clearly was technically sound when it came to the law enforcement response to an active shooter incident.

“I think the CSUN community should feel good about the fact that there is professional expertise on this campus to deal with this kind of emergency,” said Chief Glavin.

The January 3 operation was staged in and around the LAUSD’s Northridge Academy, located on the campus’ east side. “The CSUN police department does active shooter training on an annual basis at least two or three times a year at the firing range,” said Chief Glavin, “but this is the first time we’ve operated a drill of this nature in partnership with other agencies.”

CHP and LAPD officials were so pleased with the success of the multi-agency exercise that they were eager to join forces again for the January 10 training, a campuswide operation involving CSUN’s Emergency Operations Center (EOC).

President Jolene Koester in mid-2007 had requested that the 2008 EOC training focus on a simulated shooting incident. The president recently had convened a working group on post-Virginia Tech safety issues to examine campus procedures in light of the April 2007 tragedy.

The EOC event involved nearly 90 individuals and 18 campus units, including the EOC—the President, Chief Glavin and other top campus leaders—Student Health Services, Public Safety’s Matador Patrol and others.

“From what we’re hearing, it was the most realistic training we’ve ever had,” said the chief. Instead of a tabletop drill, in which participants sit around a table working from a printed scenario, Public Safety launched a field exercise in which participants had to respond to EOC directives as if the situation were playing out in real time.

In the simulated exercise, CSUN officers received a call about a disturbance in the USU’s Pub. Out on the Plaza del Sol, Chief Glavin and investigating officers heard shots fired and called for help. The chief immediately set up an incident command post, obtained the official go-ahead from Tom McCarron, vice president for administration and finance and CFO, and instructed EOC coordinator Kit Espinosa to activate the EOC.

In the “real time” enactment, two shooters were fatally shot by law enforcement officials, an explosive device was deliberately detonated by bomb technicians, and a gas leak was shut off by Physical Plant Management experts.

“A triage area also was set up on the Plaza del Sol, with Student Health Services rendering help to those in need,” said Espinosa. “Victims” were supplied by Matador Patrol members, and realistic television news footage and bulletins “kept the adrenaline pumping” throughout the drill.

A thorough debriefing followed the exercise, in which EOC members sifted through the day’s events and analyzed the results. Aside from minor adjustments such as the need for certain maps and reference documents, the chief said, the exercise as a whole showed the campus responding professionally and efficiently to a “shooter” crisis.

“We should not rest on our laurels, because there’s always something we can look at and do better,” said Chief Glavin, “but people certainly should not have high anxiety about the university’s capability in this area.” ■

In Brief

President Koester to be Honored at 'Tree of Life' Gala

President Koester

Because she makes a difference in the San Fernando Valley, President Jolene Koester will be honored February 14 at the Encino-Tarzana Hospital Charitable Foundation's annual "Tree of Life" gala.

"She's always been a community person, and of course, she promotes education," said Sandy Goldman, president of the foundation. The award will spotlight Koester's high visibility in the Valley, her community outreach and her philosophy that college is possible even for those who may have considered a degree out of reach.

The 6 p.m. event will be held at Valley Beth Shalom in Encino. Last year's inaugural gala, which attracted 400 guests, honored Los Angeles

Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa for his initiatives to improve public education.

The "Tree of Life," symbolic of the birth to death cycle of life at hospitals, is the foundation's motif, according to Goldman. There are leafy artistic representations, she pointed out, at both campuses of the Encino-Tarzana Regional Medical Center.

"[The] primary goal of the foundation is raising money for nursing scholarships," Goldman said. "We have given many scholarships to students at CSUN who want to go into nursing."

The annual gala also raises funds for three nonprofits. Among them this year is the CSUN-affiliated Valley Trauma Center, which operates sexual assault hotlines 24 hours a day as well as a wide range of other services, such as individual and group counseling, parent education, child abuse prevention and many more.

A chartered agency of the Michael D. Eisner College of Education under the auspices of the Department of Educational Psychology and Counseling, the center also trains students and volunteers.

For more information, call gala chair Stephanie Carter at (818) 990-0105.

New Faculty/Staff Prices for Sports Events

Matador Athletics has announced new faculty/staff pricing for regular Cal State Northridge home games in all sports, with men's basketball general admission seats going for only $6 (formerly $8), a bargain at a time when the team is scoring win after win in the Big West Conference.

General admission prices for all other ticketed athletic events—including women's basketball, baseball, men's and women's volleyball, softball, men's and women's soccer—are being slashed from $5 to $3.

The Matadome has been alive with sold-out student sections and pep bands for basketball games such as the team's 100–61 victory over defending Big West champion Cal State Long Beach on January 26.

With four more men's basketball home games scheduled, assistant athletic director for marketing and promotions Erin Kiser described it as a "very exciting time" for the CSUN athletic program. The next men's basketball home game is scheduled for 7:05 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 16, against UC Riverside.

Faculty and staff should show their CSUN identification at the ticket window of any sports venue to receive the discount. Up to four tickets may be purchased with faculty/staff ID. For more information, call the Associated Students ticket office at (818) 677-2488. ■
