'An Ounce of Prevention' May Keep the Doctor Away

Health Center, Kinesiology and Others Offer Wellness Services

The saying, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," describes the philosophy of health professionals at Cal State Northridge.

The Klotz Student Health Center, the Office of Human Resources and the departments of Kinesiology and Physical Therapy are providing a variety of health services to prevent sickness in the upcoming flu season and promote wellness.

Flu shots are being offered on campus to faculty and staff. The flu, also known as influenza, is a contagious virus that can be spread by coughing or sneezing. It can lead to pneumonia and can be dangerous for people with breathing issues or heart conditions.

"It's not just for you but to protect others," said Mercedes Gallup, a registered nurse and the health center's nursing and clinical support unit supervisor. "It may offer protection from the few strains of flu viruses most anticipated this season."

According to the national Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), more than 200,000 people are hospitalized from flu complications each year and 36,000 die from flu. The vaccine is recommended for anyone who wants to reduce the likelihood of becoming ill with the flu or spreading the virus to others around them. Influenza viruses are always changing, so the CDC recommends vaccination once a year.

Mercedes Gallup, Klotz Student Health Center registered nurse, prepares to give a flu shot to Peter Grego, chair of CSUN's Theatre Department, during a campus flu shot clinic on Oct. 16.

Gallup, who coordinates the health center's immunization program, said it's particularly important for faculty and staff to get their shots now before the season peaks in January. She said getting a flu shot could prevent the spread of a virus campus-wide.

The Office of Human Resources/Employee Assistance Program and the health center are teaming up again on Wednesday, Nov. 12 in HR Training Room, Oviatt 16 (Garden Level) to provide flu immunization. No registration is necessary but each employee must bring a check for $15 and his or her employee identification.

In addition to the flu shots, there are a variety of other wellness services available to help prevent cold and flu and promote overall health. For a fee, the health center offers services ranging from acupuncture to massage therapy to smoking cessation counseling. Eligible employees may also participate in the CSU Fee Waiver and Reduction Program, which may pay for some of these services. For information about eligibility, e-mail feewaiver@csun.edu.

Steven Loy, a professor in kinesiology and expert on physical exercise and health, said individuals who do not get enough exercise or rest and are highly stressed are more susceptible to illnesses like flu.

"If an individual takes care of [himself or herself] by exercising, eating correctly and getting adequate rest, the other things will fall into place," said Loy, who has designed several "wellness programs" to help faculty and staff increase their physical activity.

His CSUN & You @ Half Dome program promotes physical fitness through walking and hiking. Through a collaborative project between the kinesiology and physical therapy departments, Loy launched workPHT. Through this program, students provide a series of flexibility and strengthening exercises to those who spend long hours at their desk. The goal is to improve posture, health and well being.

CSUN Leads Effort to Release Imprisoned Graduate Student

Esha Momeni Detained in Iran While Doing Research

Esha Momeni

Cal State Northridge's leadership team has rallied in support of the release of master's degree student Esha Momeni and advocated for "intercultural communications" and "mutual understanding."

President Jolene Koester wrote a letter to Mohammad Khazee, Iran's ambassador to the United Nations, asking for the release of the 28-year-old graduate student, who is being held at Evin prison in Tehran. Koester offered to send a representative to meet with the ambassador. As of Friday, Oct. 31, university officials had not received any response.

"We are, of course, respectful of Iranian due process," wrote Koester in her Oct. 23 letter to the ambassador. "Since you have participated in academic life...you will understand our concern for the safety of a fellow scholar."

The president made the appeal after finding out from press reports that Momeni had been detained by Iranian police. The graduate student in mass communications was arrested by Esha Momeni continued on page 2.

CSUN Launches Institute for Sustainability

New Institute Brings 'Greening' Efforts Together

Bringing Cal State Northridge's environmental and greening efforts under one umbrella, Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs Harry Hellenbrand recently announced the creation of the Institute for Sustainability.

He said in an October 27 e-mail to campus that the institute was the culmination of the work of the deans that was initiated and shepherded by William Jennings, dean of the College of Business and Economics. It is part of a broader Campus Greening Project that was launched earlier this year.

"There seems to be a general agreement that there is a real need for interdisciplinary research and work," said Ashwani Vasishth, assistant professor in the Department of Urban Studies and Planning and the newly appointed director of the Institute for Sustainability. "You can't solve complex problems in a box."

"We want to take an integrated approach," Vasishth added.

The mission of the institute is to promote, facilitate, and develop educational, research, and university and community programs related to sustainability. Hellenbrand said the institute serves as an "umbrella organization" across all the colleges of the university on issues related to sustainability and is committed to serving the entire campus community, especially students, staff and faculty. Diane Stephens, from Academic Affairs, is facilitating the Campus Greening Project.

In his announcement, Hellenbrand explained that sustainable development is "development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs." A decision is considered to be sustainable when it takes appropriate account, in the short-run and the long-run, of all three criteria or factors—economic, environmental, and social.

Cal State Northridge has long been considered a leader in energy conservation among universities across the country. Last year, Physical Plant Management completed the installation of a one megawatt fuel cell power plant, the single largest fuel cell power plant at any university in the world. The fuel cell generates base load electricity for the university's facilities and surplus heat for buildings, showers and food service. Twenty-three percent of CSUN's electric power comes from a combination of the fuel cell, solar power and a half dozen microturbines installed on campus in 2001.

The second phase of the project is expected to be launched in a few months. The carbon dioxide exhaust produced by the fuel cell will be diverted underground to a satellite chiller plant and subtropical rain forest. The enriched carbon dioxide, along with waste stream water, will sustain the plant life in the rainforest and reduce the campus' overall carbon footprint.

Tom Brown, executive director of Physical Plant Management, said the new institute will offer "a broad portfolio" of sustainable systems and practices.

"It's great to know there is going to be a concerted focus and effort by the broader community," he added.

Vasishth said a key initiative of the institute involves the preparation of a state-of-the-campus ecological footprint report, taking account of the environmental impacts in terms of greenhouse gas emissions.

A survey is being conducted to better understand student travel patterns and to characterize the extent to which the campus is responsible for greenhouse gas emissions due to transportation. The institute will reach out to the Northridge community as well, working with the Valley Economic Alliance to explore ways to move the region in the direction of carbon neutrality as part of the statewide effort to mitigate global climate change. ■

Iranian police on Oct. 15 for allegedly passing another vehicle on the highway illegally. She was taken to her home, where tapes containing interviews for her project were confiscated.

Momeni, who was born in the United States but grew up in Iran, had been working on a documentary focusing on the women's rights movement in Iran. She had been recording interviews of volunteers with the One Million Signatures campaign, an organization that is working to change Iran's constitution to state that men and women are equal.

Melissa Wall, adviser to the graduate program in mass communications and a member of Momeni's thesis committee, said the student was interested in women's rights in Iran because she had suffered from domestic abuse. According to reports, Momeni was married to a man in Iran who was violent. She had difficulty getting a divorce because of Iranian law. She also wanted to change the American view of Iranian women.

Wall said Momeni was concerned that most Americans have a "very narrow, or very passive" view of Iranian women. The student wants the world to see the diversity of Iranian women, she added.

According to the Los Angeles Times, Iranian Ministry spokesman Hassan Qashqavi told reporters in Tehran last week that Momeni was "under investigation." No formal charges have been made.

In the meantime, several other organizations, including Amnesty International, World Organization Against Torture and the American Association of University Professors have called for Momeni's release.

Harry Hellenbrand, provost and vice president for academic affairs, said at a recent press conference that the university values students like Momeni.

"We really want everybody to understand we value her as a person. We value her as a dreamer. We value her as a representative of the students at this campus and the students across the world," he said.

"This is a campus that values intercultural communication a great deal and we are always aggrieved when there is ever any instance of that being violated or hurt because that really damages what we are all about in some way," he added. ■

BudgetWatch

As you have perhaps heard, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger has announced a midyear budget cut to the California State University system of $31.3 million (about 1.1 percent of money the CSU receives from the state). This budget reduction action is within the governor's executive authority and requires no legislative action. Our share of the budget cut at Cal State Northridge is $2,160,700.

You have also recently received a letter from Chancellor Charles B. Reed explaining this latest action. Based on state revenues that are less than projected, the Chancellor's Office also anticipates additional midyear cuts from the state by January 2009.

As was recently communicated in the FAQs on 2008-09 Budget Situation document, we at Cal State Northridge have anticipated this budget downturn for a long time, and have planned accordingly. We have factored potential midyear budget cuts into our 2008-09 planning.

The FAQs on 2008-09 Budget Situation document is posted at: <http://www.csun.edu/presofc/presletters/presletter-10-2008-budget.html>.

The university has survived previous budget downturns while providing quality education for our students, and we will survive this one. Because of these recent and anticipated cuts, we will control the number of qualified students we accept and be frugal in our spending, certainly postponing or scaling back some expenditures, but we will also continue to move the campus forward and support our faculty and staff and provide high quality education for our students. Indeed, these budget cuts underscore the necessity of continuing our efforts to cultivate sources of non-state funding.

Through this difficult budget year, be assured that the basic values and mission of the university demand that we educate students while maintaining quality. You are here because the work you do is important. Especially in these difficult times, let's work together to serve our students, support and develop our faculty and staff, and move the university forward.

Sincerely,

Jolene Koester
