Cal State Northridge has an outstanding business school, according to The Princeton Review. The New York-based education services company features CSUN's College of Business and Economics in the just-published 2009 edition of its "Best 296 Business Schools."

Taking the idea of education reform to the next level, CSUN's Michael D. Eisner College of Education this fall enrolled its first cohort of 24 students in its new Doctoral Program in Education Leadership, with an eye toward shaping K–12 administrators who are willing to think outside the box and explore and support innovative ideas in the classroom. University officials have designed a similar program for community college administrators that starts next year.

In short, to paraphrase William Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in matters vegetable, animal and mineral, Northridge has received a new collection that would impress even the Modern Major General. CSUN's Oviatt Library is now home to an expansive assortment of nearly 1,000 books, musical scores and posters related to Gilbert and Sullivan, donated by Valencia resident David Trutt.
