Course Description

Seventy-three women serve in the U.S. House of Representatives and 17 serve in the U.S. Senate. This seminar explores the ways in which congresswomen affect representation and policy making, along with the factors that enhance and constrain women's election to Congress and women's influence in Congress. We focus on gender dynamics in congressional elections, representation, the legislative process, and the pursuit of power inside Congress. Although the number of congresswomen has increased during the last two decades—only 25 women served in the U.S. Congress twenty years ago—women remain dramatically underrepresented. We begin the course by uncovering the sources of women's underrepresentation by studying gender differences in candidate emergence and congressional elections. Next, we ask whether congresswomen and congressmen advocate different policy agendas and issue positions. We consider the representational implications of the gender differences we uncover, including substantive policy differences and non-policy benefits that are conferred to citizens when women occupy positions of political power. We analyze the institutional features of Congress, asking how congressional parties, committee, and rules may help and hinder congresswomen pursuing power and policy.

Required Texts/Readings

The required readings for this course include 2 books and many articles posted on WebCT (www.myu.umn.edu). On occasion, I will post short additional required readings.

Carroll, Susan J., and Richard L. Fox, eds. 2010. Gender and Elections: Shaping the Future of American Politics, 2nd Edition. Cambridge University Press.

Rosenthal, Cindy Simon, ed. 2002. Women Transforming Congress. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press.

Course Requirements

Students will closely track the congressional careers of several members of Congress in three short papers and data collection assignments. Students will write a research paper of at least ten pages that addresses one of the themes of the course using the data that we collect as a class, and students will share their findings with the class in a short presentation near the end of the semester. In addition, there will be a take-home midterm and an in-class midterm. Class sessions will include lecture and discussion. Class participation is an essential component of this course. Students are expected to attend regularly, to read the assigned readings prior to class, and to come to class prepared to discuss the course material. On occasion, I will distribute questions about the readings. Sometimes, you will be asked to respond to the questions while completing the readings. Other times, I will distribute the questions during the class in which we are discussing the readings.

Grades will be determined as follows:

10%	Class participation
20%	Take-home midterm exam
20%	In-class midterm exam
25%	3 short papers and data collection
25%	Research paper and presentation

To pass this class you must complete every assignment. You are responsible for keeping a hard copy back-up of your papers.

LATE POLICY

Papers are due at the beginning of class. Late papers will be penalized by 5 points (out of 100) every 24 hours they are late. If you need to take a makeup exam, you must arrange it well in advance of the exam date and document your (valid) reason.

ACADEMIC DISHONESTY

You are expected to be familiar with the University's policies on scholastic dishonesty: <http://advisingtools.class.umn.edu/cgep/studentconduct.html>

You should consult a style manual for proper forms of citation. I will actively investigate potential cases of cheating and plagiarism, and any evidence thereof will result in disciplinary charges, as well as an 'F' in the course.

WRITING SUPPORT

I encourage you to consult the Center for Writing: (<http://writing.umn.edu>), a clearinghouse for the many writing resources available at the University.
