* Should all faculty be permitted to vote on contract issues or should the vote be reserved for union members?

Many factors - including temporizing the faculty and legislating academic affairs - have resulted in a reduced voice for faculty. The CFA represents only a bit more than half of the faculty - and the faculty are only one of the groups they represent. All of these factors have diluted the faculty's voice. How will this impact CSU's future?

We'll look specifically at recent actions concerning the right of represented non-union members to vote on the terms and conditions of employment.

How can we work to build the CSU in a time of increased fractiousness and reduced funding? Come be a part of an examination of current practices and proposals for our future.
