

Resubmissions & Rollovers

Resubmissions

1. The following instances require that prospective/admitted students who still wish to seek program entry must resubmit and pay for an application for a subsequent term of their choosing:
 - a. A completed application is not received by the published application deadline. This includes instances in which a prospective student started an application, but did not submit all of the required documentation—which is the prospective student's responsibility—to the specified application deadline.
 - b. An offer of admission is made to the prospective student, but—for whatever reason—the prospective student elects not to accept the admission offer in the stated term.

Rollovers

2. The following instances DO NOT require that admitted students who still wish to seek program entry resubmit or pay for an application for the subsequent term:
 - a. The offering to which they were admitted did not launch due to insufficient admission volume.
 - b. The offering to which they were admitted is full, but the partner academic department accepts rollovers to the subsequent term.
- 2.1. In the event of 2a or 2b, admitted students are given the following options:
 - a. Withdraw their application and receive a refund of the application fee.
 - b. Roll their application over to the next available offering of the program; no refund of their application fee.
 - It should be noted that 2.1b is a fixed-term offer. Such admitted students cannot elect to apply their application to any term but the next available offering of the program (i.e. it is not an open-ended offer of admission that permits the student to choose their future admission term).
