I. Procedures for Evaluating Teaching Effectiveness

A. Class Visits. During class visits, the following shall be considered:

1. Mastery and substantial coverage of the subject matter according to the course description provided in the University catalog;

2. Awareness of current trends and developments in the field;

3. Awareness of theoretical, philosophical, and practical implications of material covered in class;

4. Ability to communicate effectively;

5. Enthusiasm for teaching;

6. Sensitivity to individual student needs, including receptivity to questions;

7. Whether the instructor clarifies and illustrates the relation between the text subject and the experience of the students;

8. Whether the instructor places significant demands on students to develop critical thinking skills, including requiring students to demonstrate an ability to analyze, distinguish, and examine issues and to be able to apply course concepts to solve problems and reach conclusions. In law classes, these techniques must include use of the Socratic method so that students demonstrate their ability to identify legal issues, their knowledge of legal rules, and their understanding of how those rules are applied; and

9. In law classes, whether the instructor requires students to brief cases and answer problems in writing.

B. Additional Sources of Evidence of Teaching Effectiveness. The following factors will be considered when evaluating an instructor’s teaching effectiveness:

1. Grade distribution patterns as distributed by the department;

2. The instructor’s examinations; and

3. Inclusion of a pedagogically significant writing component. At least 50% of a course grade must be determined by a student’s written work (which may include essay exam questions, papers, written solutions to problems, and other written work).
