Cultural Intelligence (CQ) is the capability to relate and work effectively in culturally diverse situations. Your CQ predicts your readiness for working and relating effectively with people from different cultural backgrounds. The higher your CQ, the more likely you will gain new opportunities, earn higher wages and experience success working in today's diverse, globalized world. This webcast will explore what cultural intelligence is, why it matters at Cal State and strategies for improving your CQ. We will also discuss why it is the foundation to diversity, equity and inclusion.

About Dr. Sandra Upton

This webcast will be recorded and available on CSU Learn

Dr. Sandra Upton is Vice President of Global Diversity Practice with the Cultural Intelligence Center and is responsible for providing leadership and expertise on diversity, equity, and inclusion matters for CQC clients across the Globe. Dr. Upton is also the subject matter expert for the Center's work in unconscious bias and led the Center's unconscious bias certification programs across the globe. She is a frequent speaker and consults with numerous businesses and institutions on how to effectively integrate CQ and unconscious bias assessments and training into business and educational settings
