Entrepreneur and Developer Paul Jennings '85 (Marketing) began his dynamic career in aerospace and later transitioned to the telecommunications industry during its early deregulating period. Over the next 30 years, Paul created several companies—including Public Communications Services, the third largest provider of inmate telephone services to correctional facilities nationwide.

In 1995, at the bottom of California's worst recession, Paul created a construction, property management, and development company that built, managed, and owned a portfolio of more than 4,000 apartment units. Paul next transitioned into the residential market, building a significant residential housing and home site real estate portfolio.

Recently, Jennings has built a renewable energy company known as PCS Energy.
