“It’s far too ugly for me to die here!” - noted industrial designer Michael Graves, when asked about hospitals. The ugliness that prompted Graves’ outburst included the devices he came across because of his new disability.

Wheelchairs, walkers, prosthetics, crutches and other assistive technology devices are part of our lives. But in the grand scheme of design innovations, they’ve been left in the dust. There are hundreds of thousands of designs for glasses, chairs and tech of every other kind. This exhibition provides an opportunity for artists to design, build and exhibit these new innovations.

Bang Bang!: The Works of Eva Malhorta
(through Nov. 15)
West Gallery, Art and Design Center

Bang Bang! alludes to the beginning of time: a violent creation that emerged from the division of atoms and the inception of astral beings, constellations, universes, plants as well as its inhabitants. It also refers to the violence that results from the arbitrary divisions that humans build by race, gender, ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, political ideologies and economic status. These divisions isolate and destroy us along with the animal, plant and ecosystems. These are some of the themes that Eva Malhorta explores and represents through her work.

Liu brings an exuberant program to the CSUN audience, including selections from Musica ricercata by György Ligeti, C.P.E. To make the tall tale of the title come true, an aging European merchant played by Welles hires a sailor to sleep with his wife, but the elaborate set-up soon starts to take on a life of its own. Based on a short story by the Danish writer Isak Dinesen, The Immortal Story is the shortest of Welles’s feature films and first aired on French television. Together with excerpts from Welles’s great unfinished film project, Don Quixote.
