Dear colleagues in the College of Humanities, I would like to express that the Modern and Classical Languages and Literature Dept. coincides totally with the College position on any kind of racism, discrimination, and violence against any human being based on race, ethnicity, gender identity, language, and culture. As we all know, an important part of teaching languages and cultures is fighting stereotypes and misconceptions that favor one culture above another, which of course is intertwined with believes that would set one individual above another. we want to reiterate that our doors are always open to hearing the concerns and life experiences of our entire community of students, faculty members, and staff, especially in these moments of tragedy and uncertainty.

Best,

Adrian Perez Boluda, Ph.D.
Chair
Modern and Classical Langs & Lits.
California State University, Northridge