

The Department of Anthropology

College of Social and Behavioral Sciences

PRESENTS

Erin P.
Riley

DEPT. OF ANTHROPOLOGY
SAN DIEGO STATE UNIVERSITY

THE PROMISE OF Contemporary Primatology

Advancing the Study of the Human-Nonhuman
Primate Interface in the 21st Century

MONDAY

Mar. 6
4:00pm

Whitsett Room • Sierra Hall 451

CSUN

CALIFORNIA
STATE UNIVERSITY
NORTHridge

Drawing from primatology, conservation ecology, and sociocultural and environmental anthropology, Erin P. Riley's research focuses on primate behavioral and ecological flexibility in the face of anthropogenic change and the conservation implications of the ecological and cultural interconnections between human and nonhuman primates. With notable publications in American Anthropologist, Evolutionary Anthropology, American Journal of Primatology, and Oryx, her work spearheaded the field of "ethnoprimatology" – the study of the multifaceted ways the histories, ecologies, lives, and livelihoods of humans and primates intersect. Her field research in Indonesia and Florida has been funded by the National Geographic Society/Waitt Foundation, the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, and the American Institute for Indonesian Studies.

Communication services (sign language, interpreters, notetakers, real-time captionists or assistive listening devices) are available for this event. Requests for services must be submitted at least five (5) working days in advance.

This program is free of charge. Parking is available in the B3 structure via Booth 2 at Prairie St. & Darby Ave. for $8.00. For additional information, call the Anthropology Department at 818.677.3331.